Many of my designs were inspired by many curious incidents in my life. As a graphic designer I utilize these qualities to add a unique perspective into the design realm. I use my imagination to design them into existence, and then I use digital media to express the innocent curiosity of my subjects.

I thrive on the pressure of tight deadlines. I consider myself to be a creator, a writer, a communicator, a director, and a thought-provoker. My flexible approach allows my creations to take on personalities and whimsical qualities, while at the same time remaining true to the ideals of graphic design. I find great freedom in the ability to choose any media, format, or concept that I believe can best convey idea or information.

I am interested in creating experiences of discovery in which meaning unfolds and deepens. My inspirations are Shel Silverstein and Lewis Carroll. Whose captivating tales motivate my hand and my heart. My intention in designing is to connect people as dynamic receivers rather than submissive viewers.
